

Congratulations Dear Colleagues!

We believe you may become the first Ecological Humanities Department in the world, and we write to offer our enthusiastic best wishes to you all. You are an inspiration to concerned scholars everywhere!

This is a difficult time for so much of life on earth – the problems are so large, and the will to address them seriously often seems so small. Every new step that brings the sciences and the humanities together, enabling the best expertise of both paradigms to cross-fertilise, is a large and encouraging step for us all.

Departments and faculties in other countries, such as Sweden, are in the process of taking this step, and in a few years' time it will be clear that your department has been among the global leaders.

We look forward to learning more about how your department develops in the coming years. You will have much to teach us. We hope you will have many years of rewarding collaboration, that you will educate many fine students, and that the students will go on to make a difference in Taiwan and in the world.

With all good wishes,

The Ecological Humanities Group
